I am a long-term consultant to the NGO umbrella organisation Policy Forum, which published an annual Tanzania Governance Review that I have edited since 2006. On completion of the ten-year series, I am collaborating with PF to undertake a series of follow-up studies examining Tanzania's Institutions of Accountability. Currently, PF is initiating a study of the performance of the Prevention and Combating of Corruption Bureau (PCCB) following many years of donor-supported projects. The study is intended to contribute to the evidence base of the costs of corruption. Other similar research projects are planned, in which I would expect to play a sizable remunerated role. These are income-generating initiatives which complement rather than compromise my pro bono activities.
